

Workplace Investigators

A workplace investigation is a comprehensive, impartial and objective fact-finding process. It is used to establish the facts relating to a complaint or grievance made by an employee and to determine if, on the balance of probability, the allegation(s) is substantiated. Common types of workplace investigations include those relating to bullying, harassment, discrimination and employee misconduct.